T-B SANITARIUM QUESTION IS UP TO COUNTY BOARD

ROAD RESOLUTIONS IMPORTANT MEASURE WHICH MUST BE CONSIDERED AT THE FALL SESSION THIS MONTH

When the County Board of Supervisors meet here a week from next Tuesday, they will be confronted with the problem of deciding what this county shall do on the County Anti-Tuberculosis Sanitarium. Officials from the state anti-tuberculosis association, citizens of the county health organizations and associations as well as health officials are united on the necessity of a sanitarium and are expected to appear before the County Board to urge an appropriation for a building.

Roads an Issue

Just what the County Board will do in regard to the paving program during the coming year and on the good roads movement is a question. It is known that resolutions are to be presented at the coming session for appropriations for the town of Grand Rapids for concrete road on Eighth street south, outside of city limits, for a stretch east of Arpin and in other sections of the county, where there are gaps between concrete highways. Many supervisors are of the opinion it is said, that the county owes such towns as have not had any of the concrete paving voted under the bond issue special appropriations for their proportionate share of paving. The opinion has been expressed by several good roads boosters and particularly at the big meeting with State Highway Engineer Hirst here on Oct. 18, by ex-Mayor Briere that the county has a normal obligation, if not a legal obligation to those towns, which have not secured concrete roads because of the high costs than estimated at the time the million and a half dollar issue was voted.

Elect Commissioner

The most important office within the gift of the County Board, which is to be filled this session, is that of County Highway Commissioner. The present incumbent, Edw. Morris, who has handled the affair of the office in a very satisfactory manner, is a candidate for reelection and is not expect to have any serious opposition for the office.

Other offices such as various members of commissions in the county organization that expire this year will be chosen at the coming session.

QUIET CAMPAIGN IS NEARING END

PROGRESSIVE REPUBLICAN TICKET EXPECTED TO HAVE EASY VICTORY IN GENERAL ELECTION TUESDAY

(By Associated Press)

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 4—Political campaigning in Wisconsin following the overwhelming vote of the progressive republican ticket headed by United States Senator Robert M. LaFollette, has been the quietest in many years, it being generally conceded that next Tuesday's vote will be a ratification of the primary endorsement as far as the senior senator and state ticket are concerned.

Senator LaFollette's principal opponent is Jessie Jack Hooper of Oshkosh who failed to qualify as a democratic party candidate at the primary and is in the race as an independent democrat.

Adolph R. Bucknam represents the prohibition party in a three cornered race. Mrs. Hooper has made a pretty thorough canvass of the state and has been assisted by women from other states.

LaFollette Aids Schneider

The efforts of Senator LaFollette since the primary have been directed in Wisconsin, principally in behalf of George J. Schneider in his race for congress in the 9th district. He is opposed by Judge Henry Graass who is running as an independent republican.

Mr. LaFollette also campaigned for the election of Joseph Barber for the state senate from the 25th district. He is opposed by Ralph E. Smith running as an independent republican.

Visiting Doctor Urges Importance Of T. B. Test

The importance of prompt action by the dairymen of Wood county to promote the county wide Tuberculosis clean up was urged by Dr. Collins assistant state veterinarian who spoke at the meeting of the county Holstein association at Marshfield Thursday afternoon.

EKERN TO DEFEND ANTI-TRUST LAW IN HIGH COURT

BIG CASE WILL PROBABLY NOT BE CALLED UNTIL JANUARY, WHEN MORGAN WILL HAVE LEFT OFFICE

(By Associated Press)

Madison, Wis., Nov. 4—Defense of the Wisconsin anti-trust statute against an attack to be made in the Supreme Court and continuance of prosecutions commenced by Attorney General William J. Morgan during his term of office, will devolve upon his successor, Herman L. Ekern, it developed today.

The validity of the anti-trust law, questioned by wholesale tobacco companies operating in the state, will probably not come before the Supreme court for a test until the January term, according to Attorney General Morgan. This will mean that the next attorney general will be called upon to defend the statute.

Eleven Suits Remain

While nine actions against alleged trade combinations have been concluded, all in favor of the state, eleven cases remain on the court dockets for settlement. Included in this number is the suit against the tobacco company which has appealed to the Supreme court to hold the entire statute unconstitutional.

Attorney General Morgan will include in his biennial budget to be submitted to the state board of public affairs on November 14, a request that the state continue its special appropriation of $10,000 to aid in the prosecution of anti-trust actions. This will mean continuance of the anti-trust department of the attorney general's office, commenced by Attorney General Morgan.

Claim Discrimination

In attacking the anti-trust law passed by the 1921 session of the legislature at the attorney general's request, the tobacco companies claim that the statute is discriminatory because it excludes from its provisions farmer and labor organizations, that it was illegally enacted, and that suits commenced under its provisions must all be directed by the governor or the legislature.

Judge William B. Quinlan of the 20th Wisconsin circuit, held in deciding this case in the lower court that the law did not exempt labor and farm organizations if they violated the law, but that the mere organization of these persons for ordinary purposes should not be construed to be illegal, and that the legislature might classify services differently than commodities. He decided that the attorney general on his own motion could investigate and commence actions against alleged combinations in restraint of trade without direction of the governor or legislature, and he decided that the law was lawfully enacted.

Not Likely to Be Called

Appeal was taken to the Supreme court in the action after the August calender was completed so that it is the opinion of Attorney General Morgan that the suit will not be called for argument until the January term. By that time he will have left his present office and Mr. Ekern will have this place.

G. F. Gifford, special assistant attorney general, in charge of anti-trust actions is expected to leave the office with Attorney General Morgan, and it will be left to the incoming attorney general to appoint a successor.

The extent of activity the new attorney general will take in carrying out the law is not known now.

ROY HEMIL MEETS TRAGIC DEATH WHILE REPAIRING ELECTRIC LINES FOR WISCONSIN VALLEY ELECTRIC CO.

Stevens Poin, Nov. 4—Roy Hemil, 23 years of age, a resident of Bancroft and an employee of the Wisconsin Valley Electric Co. met almost instant death at 10 o'clock this morning at Stevens Point, when he fell across a high power electric line and was electrocuted. City health officials, three doctors and the police force were summoned to the scene of the accident and worked for over an hour with the city pulmotor in an attempt to save his life but all efforts were futile.

Employed 12 Days

Hemil had been an employee of the electric company only twelve days. He was engaged in mounting a pole at the corner of Church and Brawley streets and had climbed up near the top, where he was putting on a rubber insulating tube on a power line carrying voltage of 2300 volts preparatory to going above the dangerous line to saw off the top of the pole which was not used. In some manner he slipped and his body fell across the uninsulated high powered line inflicting the injuries which caused his death.

As he fell, Hemil uttered a cry for help which was heard by John Graff a fellow workman, who was below. Graff shouted for aid and other linemen telephoned the central station to have the current shut off immediately all over the city. Hemil was removed from the pole by fellow workmen and medical aid summoned.

The victim of the tragic accident was married. His wife and six months old child reside in Almond.

New Spur Track To Mill In Use Eliminates Delay

The new spur track into the Consolidated Water Power & Paper Company's yards, built by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad with the cooperation of the local mill, has been placed in service and traffic to and from the Consolidated mill no longer passed over the track running in from the south and crossing Grand avenue on Second avenue. The old track is no longer in use and will be torn up within a short time according to an announcement today.

The change, freeing as it does the principal business street of the city from the inconvenience of traffic delays, is an important one to the city. Hitherto the switching of freight cars back and forth on the old Second avenue track has been the cause of considerable inconvenience. The change benefits not only automobile traffic but will eliminate the stop hitherto made by the street cars to flag the crossing and thus will save a minute or two on every round trip.

The new spur track runs into the Consolidated yards from the northwest, crossing the main line of the Green Bay and Western and connecting with the C. M. & St. P. near the Fourth avenue crossing. Streets in that section of town do not carry a heavy traffic, and it is not anticipated that any serious inconvenience will result through running freight to and from the mill in that way.

Loss Slight In Fire At A. C. Berard Home Today

Fire, presumably caused by an over heated flue, which broke out in the A. C. Berard home on Baker street this morning, was quickly extinguished by the fire department and the estimated damage amounted to only a few dollars.

Fire Chief August Miller in commenting on the event said that the blaze might easily have developed into a serious fire if the department has not been promptly summoned. He emphasized the importance of putting in a call for the fire department as soon as fire is discovered, not first attempting to put out the fire and then calling the department after it has got beyond control.

COAST TO COAST TRIP ENDS AFTER RECORD DISTANCE

ARMY AVIATORS FORCED TO LAND AT INDIANAPOLIS AFTER FLIGHT FROM SAN DIEGO AVIATION FIELD.

(By Associated Press)

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 4—Lieutenants Oakley Kelly and John McReady, attempting a trans-continental flight were forced down at Fort Benjamin Harrison near here this morning.

A cracked water tank was said to have forced the aviators to descend.

New Non-Stop Record

Washington, Nov. 4—Although they did not succeed in their attempt to fly across the continent without landing, Lieutenants MacReady and Kelly piloting the American airplane, T-2, are declared by air service officials here to have set a new distance record by their non-stop flight from San Diego to Indianapolis.

By their continuous flight from San Diego to Indianapolis in the army airplane T-2, Lieutenants Mac Ready and Kelly not only established a long distance record for non-stop flying, but also demonstrated the possibility of a non-stop flight from coast to coast.

Overcame Difficulties

The T-2 had overcome the chief obstacles of a trans-continental flight before being forced down at Fort Benjamin Harrison by a minor defect. Night flying and the passage of mountain passes and over the canyons of the southwest were the most difficult features of the attempt.

Observers here have checked the course of the T-2 on a map and estimated the distance traversed at upwards of 2100 miles, which corresponds with the calculation made by the flyers themselves. The previous non-stop record for heavier than air machines is about 1800 miles.

The time required is estimated at a little over 25 hours and the speed of the plane at an average of more than 75 miles an hour.

The T-2 was equipped with special gas tanks and water tanks for the voyage, and the men had expected to reach New York within 32 hours from the time of departure from San Diego.

Carried Heavy Load

Loaded as it was with thousands of pounds of gasoline and water, it was dangerous to attempt a landing until a large amount of the fuel had been consumed and the weight of the machine was reduced considerably.

It was estimated that with the amount of fuel and supplies on the plane, they would not take the chance of smashing to the ground. As the fuel diminished, however, the climbing ability of the plane increased and the course of the plane was almost eliminated through the elevation of some 10,000 feet before Fort Benjamin Harrison was reached.

Streets in that section of town do not carry a heavy traffic, and it is not anticipated that any serious inconvenience will result through running freight to and from the mill in that way.

Rain Is Predicted Here For Tonight Or Tomorrow

Geo. T. Nixon gives the following for the weather forecast for this vicinity: increasing cloudiness followed by rain tonight or tomorrow.

The highest temperature recorded here Friday was 60 degrees. Last year on the same date it was 50 degrees. The warmest was 65 in 1904 while the coldest was 20 in 1910. The sun rose today at 6:33 a. m. and will set at 4:53 p. m.

The weather is cloudy and unsettled over the greater part of the country and light precipitation has occurred in the western and northwestern sections. Snow continues to fall in Utah, Wyoming, Arizona and Montana. The coldest weather so far has been reported in western Canada. The disturbance is advancing eastward very slowly and probably will not reach this vicinity before Saturday night or Sunday. Colder weather is following in the rear of the disturbance.

An American Marine Exposition, under the auspices of the American Marine Association will open today in the Grand Central Palace, New York, for a week's engagement.

Port Arthur Man Named Manager Biron Division

J. B. Purves of Port Arthur, Ontario, has been named inill manager of the Biron mill of the Consolidated Co. to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Fred Eberhardt, it was learned today. Mr. Eberhardt, present mill manager, has tendered his resignation to the company, effective Dec. 1st. Mr. Eberhardt is desirous of removing his family from their present home in Biron to their old home in Wisconsin Rapids, but he is not yet ready to announce what his future plans are. It is possible that he will continue with the company in some other capacity.

At Biron 7 Years

Mr. Eberhardt has been with the mill at Biron for the past seven years, serving five years as employment manager at that division and during the past two years as mill manager.

Formerly With Company

Mr. Purves, who succeeds Mr. Eberhardt, was formerly with the Interlake Pulp & Paper Co. Division of the Consolidated in an important capacity and in taking up his new work with the company is renewing old connections. After leaving the Interlake plant at Appleton, Mr. Purves took charge of the Pulp & Paper Machinery department of the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Co. He will bring a wealth of experience to his new position having been connected with several large pulp and paper companies in the middle west and east. Mr. and Mrs. Purves will move here after December 1 and have already located a home in Wisconsin Rapids.

Loss Slight In Fire At A. C. Berard Home Today

Fire, presumably caused by an over heated flue, which broke out in the A. C. Berard home on Baker street this morning, was quickly extinguished by the fire department and the estimated damage amounted to only a few dollars.

Fire Chief August Miller in commenting on the event said that the blaze might easily have developed into a serious fire if the department has not been promptly summoned. He emphasized the importance of putting in a call for the fire department as soon as fire is discovered, not first attempting to put out the fire and then calling the department after it has got beyond control.

ARMY AVIATORS FORCED TO LAND AT INDIANAPOLIS AFTER FLIGHT FROM SAN DIEGO AVIATION FIELD.

(By Associated Press)

Indianapolis, Ind., Nov. 4—Lieutenants Oakley Kelly and John McReady, attempting a trans-continental flight were forced down at Fort Benjamin Harrison near here this morning.

A cracked water tank was said to have forced the aviators to descend.

New Non-Stop Record

Washington, Nov. 4—Although they did not succeed in their attempt to fly across the continent without landing, Lieutenants MacReady and Kelly piloting the American airplane, T-2, are declared by air service officials here to have set a new distance record by their non-stop flight from San Diego to Indianapolis.

By their continuous flight from San Diego to Indianapolis in the army airplane T-2, Lieutenants Mac Ready and Kelly not only established a long distance record for non-stop flying, but also demonstrated the possibility of a non-stop flight from coast to coast.

Overcame Difficulties

The T-2 had overcome the chief obstacles of a trans-continental flight before being forced down at Fort Benjamin Harrison by a minor defect. Night flying and the passage of mountain passes and over the canyons of the southwest were the most difficult features of the attempt.

Observers here have checked the course of the T-2 on a map and estimated the distance traversed at upwards of 2100 miles, which corresponds with the calculation made by the flyers themselves. The previous non-stop record for heavier than air machines is about 1800 miles.

The time required is estimated at a little over 25 hours and the speed of the plane at an average of more than 75 miles an hour.

The T-2 was equipped with special gas tanks and water tanks for the voyage, and the men had expected to reach New York within 32 hours from the time of departure from San Diego.

Carried Heavy Load

Loaded as it was with thousands of pounds of gasoline and water, it was dangerous to attempt a landing until a large amount of the fuel had been consumed and the weight of the machine was reduced considerably.

It was estimated that with the amount of fuel and supplies on the plane, they would not take the chance of smashing to the ground. As the fuel diminished, however, the climbing ability of the plane increased and the course of the plane was almost eliminated through the elevation of some 10,000 feet before Fort Benjamin Harrison was reached.

BETTER ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS

The effort now being made to provide children in rural districts with educational opportunities equal to those for city children is evidence that the American public is taking the slogan "Equal educational opportunities for all children" seriously. This is a promise of better things since there are many inequalities that need removing besides those between city and country children. One of the greatest of these seems inherent in the organization of a school system to a greater or less degree.

The inequality in question is that which exists between the high school and the elementary school. It is usually the high school that citizens have in mind when they speak of the educational advantages which their city affords. It is the high school that is generally pointed out to visitors. As proof of its excellence, their attention is called to its fine auditorium, its laboratories and workshops, and its gymnasium supplemented by a well-equipped athletic field. Incidentally the fact may be mentioned that all the members of the teaching staff are college trained.

Do not the children of elementary school age need the opportunity for physical development which gymnasiums and playgrounds offer as much as those of high-school age? Because habits and attitudes are formed early do they not also need the opportunity for directed observation which a laboratory offers? Do they not need the opportunity which a workshop gives for experiment and instruction with material all the more because of their exuberant activity? But how many elementary schools are there that have facilities for physical exercise, experimentation and construction?

If the 6,011,160 children enrolled in the elementary schools of the cities of the United States in 1918 are to have educational opportunities equal to those which the 922,131 enrolled in the high schools for that year, material improvement in the elementary schools of the country will be necessary. More adequate equipment, more effective organization, and better teachers mean larger educational expenditures. There are many cities in which the improvements indicated are already under way. The organization of junior high schools, new elementary school buildings that make provision for children's activities, and an increasing number of kindergartens furnish evidence of a new attitude toward elementary education.

The question, "Shall we save money or save children?" is already being answered in the right way in many cities. The elementary school has been characterized as the greatest instrument of democracy the world has ever known. To the extent that the people recognize this high purpose will they cooperate to make it function effectively.

POPULAR GOVERNMENT

One of the unfortunate and seemingly unavoidable features of our American form of government is the fact that public opinion and with it of course the majority vote is much more likely to be swayed by blind prejudice and by reaction against the ever unsatisfactory present state of affairs than by sound reason. People, cultured and educated as well as the less well equipped, vote as they feel and not as they think.

It was blind reaction against conditions as they were in the years immediately following the war that turned the country overwhelmingly to Harding and the Republican party in the fall of 1920. It is the same sort of reaction, this time against the Harding administration for its failure in two short years to right the many wrongs, real and imagined, under which the people of the country are suffering, that resulted in Senator La Follette's great victory in the Wisconsin primary and that promises to return a greatly strengthened Democratic representation to congress in the election next Tuesday.

Prejudice and tradition handed down from father to son since the civil war keeps the solid south Democratic and accounts for a large part of the reliable Republican vote in the northern states. The balance of the people, while unfettered by any such illogical and unreasoning bonds, hop from one side to the other like wild beasts in a cage, trying persistently and unintelligently to free themselves from the maze of political hokum in which free and democratic government seems eternally enwrapped.

It is not the politicians and office seekers who are to be blamed. It is their bread and butter and they have learned by long experience what the people want and what they fall for. The cure must come from below, from the people themselves, through a realization of the fact that great problems of society and government are solved through sound, thought and honest efort, not by windy campaign promises, and that above all honest and capable men in public office, no matter what their party or their theories of government, will do more for the general good than will the vote seeking vendor of pleasing promises.

Posses Have No Claim For Pay Morgan Asserts

Madison, Wis.—Posses ordered but by sheriffs to aid in the enforcement of law, or the apprehension of criminals cannot compel payment by the country for expenses incurred by the performance of this duty or for their services, William J. Morgan, attorney general, ruled in an opinion given to E. S. Jedney, district attorney of Jackson county.

The attorney general held that 25 men ordered out by the Jackson county sheriff last May were not legally entitled to pay for their work. They had spent several days looking for a man who killed a resident of the county.

"Persons called by a sheriff to assist him are a posse comitatus, and refusal to join the posse upon being direct by the sheriff to assist him in the performance of his duty would render those so refusing liable to punishment," Attorney General Morgan declared. "Such refusal was at common law an indictable offense.

"Persons commoned to assist as a posse cannot compel payment by the county for their services or expenses. They are performing a duty of citizenship for which they are no more entitled to compensation without special provision therefor in the statutes than they would be entitled to compensation for military service if the government made no such provision."

Mr. Morgan advised, however, that the district attorney was empowered to certify to the county board that the sheriff be allowed reasonable compensation for the pursuit of a criminal, and in this way secure payment for services of the posse. This, he said, was not a matter of right and the county was without authority to directly pay the men.

Scout Candidates State Issues In Talks To Voters

Boy Scout candidates whose names go before the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grade pupils of the schools of the city in the election Tuesday have been having a busy time the last two days presenting their cases to their constituents. Yesterday was devoted to short political talks and to the outlining of platforms and the boys visited the Lincoln high school, the Training school, and the Lowell, Howe and SS. Peter & Paul's schools and were given an opportunity to address the pupils in the upper grades.

Candidates for mayor, in which contest the greatest interest lies, are practically agreed on a program for public improvements and clean government. The elimination of bootleggers and moonshines and the banning of cigarettes for boys are stressed by Clifford Dolan, who also scored a popular stroke by putting forward a proposition for a picnic at the end of the school year at which refreshment are to be supplied free of charge to all school boys and girls. Harold Billmeyer, another candidate for mayor, emphasized the importance of harmony between pupils and teachers, as well as between labor and capital.

"Grand Larceny," the new photoplay at the Palace Theatre is a Goldwyn offering that presents a phase of modern life that many are all too familiar with. It tells the story of a social parasite who carries on his depredations outside the pale of the law The robber of property can be put in prison, and the man he has injured can obtain some legal satisfaction. But what balm is there for the man who has been robbed of his wife's love?

That is the situation raised in "Grand Larceny," and superbly presented by an excellent cast of Goldwyn players. Claire Windsor, a newcomer to Goldwyns pictures, is the woman who is made a plaything of two men. The role of her husband is played by Elliott Dexter, who also appears for the first time in a Goldwyn picture.

Albert Payson Terhune, the author of "Grand Larceny," has developed his story to an unusual denouement in which both men discover that their prey is not a piece of property that may be bought and sold, but a woman who emerges from her ordeal the mistress of her own soul.

Wallace Worsley directed the picture with much insight for the emotional values to be brought out. The many exquisite interior scenes were made from designs by Cedric Gibbons, the Goldwyn art director.

Do You Want Your Pocket Picked?

Well, that's exactly what will happen to you unless you watch your step when you go to the polls on November 7.

You are going to be asked to amend the State Constitution so as to permit any municipality to double its indebtedness, to acquire or build street railway properties, to buy properties for the production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of light, heat, water or power to the public.

This means that 276 million dollars worth of property on which taxes are now being paid will become tax-exempt. Who will pay the taxes to the State and to the Government on that 276 million dollars? You will, Mr. Voter. You will fill up that money hole if you are sucker enough to vote "Yes" on this Amendment.

Get mad about being called a "sucker." Get mad enough to vote "No" on the most vicious piece of legislation that has been proposed since "Grape-juice" Bill Bryan pulled his unsafe, unsound, ridiculous 16 to 1 stuff.

If this Amendment passes it gives the politicians a free rein to buy a lot of broken-down utilities at fabulous prices. with your money.

The next step in the program is that the bonds now outstanding on these properties, and that would be issued by the municipalities to finance operations, would be tax-exempt.

Do you know just what tax-exempt means? It means a perfectly legal way for the millionaires to invest their money to avoid paying taxes.

But you, Mr. Farmer, Mr. Salaried-man, Mr. Cottage-owner, Mr. Laborer, you pay the taxes that they escape.

True, the bankers and the bond men will make a lot of money out of selling the new crop of tax-free securities, but there isn't any real good reason why you should line their pockets while yours are being picked.

Don't let anybody fool you into thinking that your increased taxes will be offset by a reduction in the cost of light, heat, power, water, or transportation. You recall how the railroads were operated by-guess and by-god during the war. You remember that ships which cost a couple of hundred thousand dollars each were sold by the Emergency Fleet Corporation for as low as $600.00 apiece.

You know that public-built utilities are built and developed at fancy prices that a private institution would never dream of paying. How do they get away with it? By the people casting their votes without thinking. By the voters authorizing a lot of tricky, shrewd, grafting politicians to make expenditures such as are proposed under the Amendment on the Pink Ballot.

Go to the Polls November 7 with a grim determination to

Vote "NO" on Doubling the Debt

Get mad about being called a "sucker." Get mad enough to vote "No" on the most vicious piece of legislation that has been proposed since "Grape-juice" Bill Bryan pulled his unsafe, unsound, ridiculous 16 to 1 stuff.

If this Amendment passes it gives the politicians a free rein to buy a lot of broken-down utilities at fabulous prices, with your money.

The next step in the program is that the bonds now outstanding on these properties, and that would be issued by the municipalities to finance operations, would be tax-exempt.

Do you know just what tax-exempt means? It means a perfectly legal way for the millionaires to invest their money to avoid paying taxes.

But you, Mr. Farmer, Mr. Salaried-man, Mr. Cottage-owner, Mr. Laborer, you pay the taxes that they escape.

True, the bankers and the bond men will make a lot of money out of selling the new crop of tax-free securities, but there isn't any real good reason why you should line their pockets while yours are being picked.

Don't let anybody fool you into thinking that your increased taxes will be offset by a reduction in the cost of light, heat, power, water, or transportation. You recall how the railroads were operated by-guess and by-god during the war. You remember that ships which cost a couple of hundred thousand dollars each were sold by the Emergency Fleet Corporation for as low as $600.00 apiece.

You know that public-built utilities are built and developed at fancy prices that a private institution would never dream of paying. How do they get away with it? By the people casting their votes without thinking. By the voters authorizing a lot of tricky, shrewd, grafting politicians to make expenditures such as are proposed under the Amendment on the Pink Ballot.

Vote "NO" on Doubling the Debt

Kill the Pink Ballot!

ANTI-PROHIBITION ASSOCIATION ASKS CHANGE IN LAW

WORK FOR VICTORY IN OHIO REFERENDUM AS FIRST STEP TOWARD MODIFICATION OF STATUTE

(By Associated Press)

Cleveland, O.—Activities of The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment are being centered in Ohio this fall in an effort to liberalize provisions of the state prohibition amendment and "to show the world and congress that voters of Ohio have changed their minds about prohibition since they voted Ohio dry in 1918," according to Benedict Crowell, former assistant secretary of war, chairman of the Ohio Division.

The test is being made under provisions of the Ohio initiative and referendum law and while it is widely held that the proposal for legalizing beer and light wines can only affect beverages having an alcoholic content of 2.75 per cent alcohol or less as regards their sale, the practical effect would be to take from Ohio law enforcement machinery the right to interfere with sale for home consumption of 2.75 percent beverages, Mr. Crowell declared.

Seek Moral Effect

Leaders in the fight of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, which has its Ohio headquarters in Cleveland, say that the effect sought is a moral one because Ohio is considered throughout the nation a pivotal state, being not only the home of the president of the United States, but also national headquarters of the anti-Saloon league; the home of Federal Prohibition Commissioner Haynes and a typical cross section of the nation because it has a well-defined agricultural and industrial population.

Leaders of the liberal amendment claim that should Ohio endorse their proposal it would exert a moral influence on Washington.

According to the Association against the Prohibition Amendment the effects of the passage of the law would be:

1. Legalize the use of mild and healthful beverage in the home.

2. Limit the market of the poison peddling bootlegger.

3. Protect from prosecution for possession of cider or home-made wine or of intoxicating liquor lawfully acquired and not intended for sale.

4. Protect the home against illegal invasion and search.

5. Honest enforcement, not dishonest persecution under the prohibition laws.

Other purposes, according to the association are to have the Volstead law modified; to have each state provide its own laws on the liquor question and to eventually remove the eighteenth amendment to the federal constitution.

F. W. Marcolin, secretary, of the Ohio organization in a statement declared:

"The association is composed of prominent and reputable men and women who are citizens of Ohio and believe that the present graft, corruption and other unsatisfactory conditions arising from prohibition as brought about by the Anti-Saloon League and other kindred organizations should be corrected.

Saloon Under Ban

"The amendment means what it says, namely the legalizing of the manufacture and sale for consumption in homes and places of abode of non-intoxicating liquors. The amendment specifically forbids sale of such beverages in saloons or in any place where such beverages could be consumed on the premises where sold."

Mr. Crowell said: "What we want is temperance, not a denial of rights. If the prohibition laws had been framed so as to prevent drunkenness all men would cheerfully obey them. The only [illegible] to prevent intoxication.

"The present brand of prohibition has destroyed respect for law because it denies one of the inherent rights of man. It has resulted in disrespect for law and has caused lawlessness, misunderstandings and unrest. The evils of bootlegging and bribery have resulted in an orgy of corruption which is unparalleled in the history of the country. Sensible men are beginning to realize that this must be stopped and stopped immediately."

The amendment as it affects the enforcement provisions of the Ohio prohibition laws stated: "Possession of intoxicating liquors in the home or residence of any person for his or her personal use or the use of his or her guests when not intended for sale or other illegal purposes, shall not be unlawful.

"No search, or attempt to search the person or the property of any person without previously securing a search warrant shall be authorized in the enforcement of all laws pertaining to the prohibition of intoxication liquors."

Junior Red Cross Will Remember European Kids

Chicago—More than 115,000 children in Hungary, Austria, Albania and other countries where dire poverty prevents the usual Christmas festivities, will be remembered by American school boys and girls who are members of the Junior American Red Cross, local headquarters announce.

That number of gift boxes is being filled and will be sent to Europe in time to be distributed to the destitute childrenn at Christmas. In many cases this will be their only Christmas cheer.

The boxes will contain such articles as hair ribbon, rubber balls, rag or celluloid dolls, marbles, tops, dominoes, picture books, pictures, puzzles, mittens, stockings, handkerchiefs, combs, wash-cloths, soap, toothbrushes, tooth-powder and paste.

These gifts, all contributed by children, will be packed in paper cartons ten by four inches and on the lid will be printed a Christmas greeting from the donors.

Many schools plan the collection of home-made candies, nuts, raisins and other simple sweets which will be wrapped in oiled paper and packed in quarter-pound baking powder or cocoa tins, sealed with parifin.

Immediately after the distribution of boxes last Christmas, letters of thanks and appreciation began pouring into Red Cross headquarters to Paris and many to boys and girls in America.

The boxes will contain such articles as hair ribbon, rubber balls, rag or celluloid dolls, marbles, tops, dominoes, picture books, pictures, puzzles, mittens, stockings, handkerchiefs, combs, wash-cloths, soap, tooth-brushes, tooth-powder and paste.

These gifts, all contributed by children, will be packed in paper cartons ten by four inches and on the lid will be printed a Christmas greeting from the donors.

Many schools plan the collection of home-made candies, nuts, raisins and other simple sweets which will be wrapped in oiled paper and packed in quarter-pound baking powder or cocoa tins, sealed with parifin.

Immediately after the distribution of boxes last Christmas, letters of thanks and appreciation began pouring into Red Cross headquarters to Paris and many to boys and girls in America.

CHAPTER II

Guided by Quintana's directions, the three had made a wide detour to the east, steering by compass for the cross-roads beyond Star Pond.

In a dense growth of cedars, on a little ridge traversing wet land, Quintana halted to listen.

Sard and Sanchez, supposing him to be at their heels, continued on, pushing their way blindly through the cedars, clinging to the hard ridge in terror of sink-holes. But their progress was very slow; and they were still in sight, fighting a painful path amid the evergreens, when Quintana suddenly squatted close to the moist earth behind a juniper bush.

At first, except for the threshing of Sard and Sanchez through the massed obstructions ahead, there was not a sound in the woods.

But, presently, came a soft, swift rhythm like the pace of a forest creature in haste—a discreetly hurrying tread which was more a series of light earth-shocks than sound.

Quintana, kneeling on one knee, lifted his pistol. He already felt the slight vibration of the ground on the hard ridge. The cedars were moving just beyond him now. He waited until, through the parted foliage a face appeared.

The loud report of his pistol struck Sard with the horror of paralysis. Sanchez faced about with one spring, snarling, a weapon in either hand.

In the terrible silence they could hear something heavy floundering in the bushes, choking, moaning, thudding on the ground.

Sanchez began to creep back; Sard, more dead than alive, crawled at his heels. Presently they saw Quintana, waist deep in juniper, looking down at something.

And when they drew closer they saw Georgiades lying on his back under a cedar, the whole front of his shirt from chest to belly a sopping mess of blood.

There seemed no need of explanation. The dead Greek lay there where he had not been expected, and his two pistols lay beside him where they had fallen.

Sanchez looked stealthily at Quintana who said softly:

"Bien sure . . . . In his left side pocket, I believe."

Sanchez laid a cool hand on the dead man's heart: then, satisfied, rummaged until he found Georgiades' share of the loot.

Sard, hurriedly displaying a pair of clean but shaky hands, made the division.

When the three men had silently pocketed what was allotted to each, Quintana pushed curiously at the dead man with the toe of his shoe.

"Yeste!" he remarked. "I had place, for security, a ver' large diamon' in my pistol barrel. Now it is within the interior of this gentleman. . . ." He turned to Sanchez: I sell him to you. One sapphire. Yes?"

Sanchez shook his head with a slight sneer: "We wait—if you want your diamond, mon capitaine."

Quintana hesitated, then made a grimace and shook his head.

"No," he said, "he has swallow. Let him digest. Allons! March!"

But after they had gone on—two hundred yards, perhaps—Sanchez stopped.

"Well?" inquired Quintana. Then with a sneer: "I now recollec' that once you have been a butcher in Madrid. . . . Suit your tas'e, l'ami Sanchez."

Sard gazed at Sanchez out of sickened eyes.

"You keep away from me until you've washed yourself," he burst out, revolted. "Don't you come near me till you're clean!"

Quintana laughed and seated himself. Sanchez, with a hang-dog glance at him, turned and sneaked back on the trail they had traversed. him fish out a Spanish knife from his hip pocket and unclasp it.

Sanchez made no effort to find them. They had been gone half an hour, before he had finished the business that had turned him back.

As he stood there, examining his clothing, and washing what he could of the ominous stains from sleeve and shoe, very far away to the north he heard a curious noise—a far, faint sound such as he never before had heard.

If it were a voice of any sort there was nothing human about it. . . . Probably some sort of unknown bird . . . Perhaps a bird of prey. . . . . That was natural, considering the attraction that Georgiades would have for such creatures. . . . If it were a bird it must be a large one, he thought. . . . Because there was a certain volume to the cry. . . . . Some unknown beast of the forest. . . .

Sanchez was suddenly afraid, Scarcely knowing what he was doing he began to run along the edge of the bog.

He was tired, or thought he was, but, the alarming sounds were filling his ears now; the entire forest seemed full of them, echoing in all directions, coming in upon him from everywhere, so that he knew not in which direction to run.

The next instant he fell headlong over a ledge, struck water, felt himself whirled around in the icy, rushing current, rolled over, tumbled through rapids, blinded, deafened choked, swept helplessly in a vast green wall of water toward something that thundered in his brain an instant, then dashed it into roaring chaos.

Half a mile down the turbulent outlet of Star Pond—where a great sheet of green water pours thirty feet into the tossing foam below—and spinning, dipping, diving, bobbing up like a lost log after the drive, the body of Senor Sanchez danced all alone in the wilderness, spilling from soggy pockets diamond sapphires, rubies, emeralds, into crystal caves where only the shadows of slim trout stirred.

Very far away to the eastward Quintana stood listening, clutching Sard by one sleeve to silence him.

Presently he said: "My frien', somebody is hunting with houn's in this fores'.

"Don't leave me!" gasped the terrified diamond broker. "I don't know where to go—

Quintana faced him abruptly—with a terrifying smile and glimmer of white teeth—and shoved a pistol into the fold of fat beneath Sard's double chin:

"You hear those dogs? Yes? Ver' well: I also. Run, now. I say to you run ver' damn quick. He! Houp! Allez vous en! Beat eet!"

He struck Sard a stinging blow on his fleshy ear with the pistol barrel, and Sard gave a muffled shriek which was more like the squeak of a frightened animal.

"My God, Quintana—" he sobbed. Then Quintana's eyes blazed murder and Sard turned and ran lumbering through the thicket like a stampeded ox, crashing on amid withered brake white birch scrub and brier, not knowing whither he was headed, crazed with terror.

Sard could not run very fast. He could scarcely stand when he pulled up and clung to the trunk of a tree.

More dead than alive he embraced the tree, gulping horribly for air, every fat-incrusted organ laboring his senses swimming.

And now, directly ahead, he saw clear gray sky low through the trees. The wood's edge!

He began to run.

As he emerged from the edge of the woods, waist-deep in brush and weeds, wide before his blood-shot eyes spread Star Pond.

Even in his half-stupefied brain there was memory enough left for recognition.

He remembered the lake. His gaze traveled to the westward: and he saw Clinch's Dump standing below, stark, silent, the doors swinging open in the wind.

And after a long while he ventured to waddle nearer, slinking through brush and frosted boulders, edging always closer and closer to that silent house where nothing moved except the wind-blown door.

And now, at last, he set a furtive foot upon the threshold, tip-toed in, peered here and there, sidled to the dining room, peered in.

When, at length, Emanuel Sard discovered that Clinch Dump was tenantless, he made straight for the pantry. Here was cheese, crackers an apple pie, half a dozen bottles of home-brew beer.

He loaded his arms with all they could carry, stole through the dancehall out to the veranda, which overlooked the lake.

And here Sard slaked his raging thirst and satiated the knawing appetite of the obese, than which there is no cruel torment to an inert liver and distended paunch.

Munching, guzzling, watching, Sard squatted just within the veranda doorway, anxiously considering his chances.

In all that panorama of forest, swale and water the only thing that had alarmed him at all by moving was something in the water. When first he noticed it he almost swooned, for he took it to be a swimming dog.

In his agitation he had arisen to his feet; and then the swiming creature almost frightened Sard out of his senses, for it tilted suddenly and went down with a retort like the crack of a pistol.

He dimly remembered hearing that beavers behaved that way.

Watching the water he saw the thing out there in the lake again, swimming in erratic circles, its big dog-like head well out of the water.

It certainly was no dog. A beaver maybe. Whatever it was, Sard didn't care any longer.

Shivering, Sard filled his mouth with apple-pie and cheese and pulled the cork from another bottle of home-brew beer.

CHAPTER III

About that time, a mile and a half to the southward, James Darragh came out on the rocky and rushing outlet of Star Pond.

Over his shoulder was a rifle, and all around him ran dogs—big, powerful dogs, built like foxhounds but with rough, wiry coats of Airedales, even rougher of ear and features.

He had been seated there for ten minutes, possibly, with his tired dogs lying around him, when just above him he saw a State Troper emerge from the woods on foot, carrying a rifle over one shoulder.

"Jack!" he called in a guarded voice.

Trooper Stormont turned, caught sight of Darragh, made a signal of recognition and came toward him.

Darragh said: "Your mate, Trooper Lannis, is down stream. I've two of my own game wardens at the cross-roads, two more on the Ghost Lake Road, and two foresters and an inspector out toward Owl Marsh."

Stormont nodded, looking down at the dogs.

"What are they, Jim?"

"Otter-hounds," said Darragh, "—a breed of my own . . . But that's all they are capable of hunting, I guess," he added grimly.

Stormont's gaze questioned him.

"Well," said Darragh, "I left my two guests at Harrod Place to amuse each other, got out three couple of my otter-hounds and started them—as I hoped and supposed—on Quintana's trail."

"What happened?" inquired Stormont curiously.

"Well—I don't know. I think they were following some of Quintana's gang—for a while, anyway. After that, God knows—deer, hare, cottontail—I don't know. They yelled their baby heads off—I on the run—they're slow dogs, you know—and, whatever they were after either fooled them or there were too many trails . . . I made a mistake, that's all. These poor beasts don't know anything except an otter. I just hoped they might take Quintana's trail if I put them on it."

They had been walking for twenty minutes, possibly, exchanging scarcely a word, and they were now nearing the hilly basin where Star Pond lay, when Darragh said abruptly:

"I'm going to tell you about things, Jack. You've taken my word so far that it's all right—"

"Naturally," said Stormont simply.

The two men, who had been brother officers in the Great War, glanced at each other, slightly smiling.

"Here it is then," said Darragh. "When I was on duty in Riga for the Intelligence Department, I met two ladies in dire distress, whose mansion had been burned and looted, supposedly by the Bolsheviki.

"They were actually hungry and penniless; the only clothing they possessed they were wearing. These ladies were the Countess Orloff-Strelwitz and a young girl, Theodorica, Grand Duchess of Esthonia . . . I did what I could for them. After a while, I found out that the crime had been perpetrated by Jose Quintana's gang of international crooks masquerading as Bolsheviki."

Stormont nodded: "I also came across similar cases," he remarked.

"Well, this was a flagrant example. Quintana had burnt the chateau and had made off with over two million dollars worth of the little Grand Duchess's jewels—among them the famous Erosite gem known as The Flaming Jewel."

"I've heard of it."

"I've been after him ever since . . . But, Jack, until this morning Quintana did not possess these stolen jewels. Clinch did!"

"What!"

"Clinch served overseas in a Forestry Regiment. In Paris he robbed Quintana of these jewels. That's why I've been hanging around Clinch."

Stormont's face was flushed and incredulous. Then it lost color as he thought of the jewels that Eve had concealed—the gems for which she risked her life.

He said: "But you tell me Quintana robbed you this morning."

"He did. The little Grand Duchess and the Countess Orloff-Strelwitz are my guests at Harrod Place.

"Last night I snatched the case containing these gems from Quintana's fingers. This morning, as I offered them to the Grand Duchess, Quintana coolly stepped between us—"

His voice became bitter and his features reddened with rage poorly controlled:

"By God, Jack, I should have shot Quintana when the opportunity offered. Twice I've had the chance. The next time I shall kill him any way I can . . . Legitimately."

"Of course," said Stormont gravely. But his mind was full of the jewels which Eve had. What and whose were they—if Quintana again had the Esthonian gems in his possession?

A few minutes later, as they came out among the willows and alders on the northeast side of Star Pond, Stormont touched his comrade's arm.

"Look at that enormous dog-otter out there in the lake!"

And now the hounds, unleashed, lifted frantic voices. The very sky seemed full of the discordant tumult; wood and shore reverberated with the volume of convulsive and dissonant baying.

"Damn it," said Darragh, disgusted. "—that's what they've been trailing all the while across-woods—that devilish dog-otter yonder . . . And I had hoped they were on Quintana's trail".

A mass rush and scurry of crazed dogs nearly swept him off his feet, and both men caught a glimpse of a large bitch-otter taking to the lake from a ledge of rock just beyond.

"Well, I'm in for it now," muttered Darragh, starting along the bank toward Clinch's Dump, to keep an eye on his dogs.

Stormont followed more leisurely.

CHAPTER IV

A few minutes before Darragh and Stormont had come out on the farther edge of Star Pond, Sard, who had heard from Quintana about the big drain pipe which led from Clinch's pantry into the lake, decided to go in and take a look at it.

He had been told all about its uses—how Clinch—in the event of a raid by State Troopers or Government enforcement agents—could empty his contraband hootch into the lake if necessary—and even could slide a barrel of ale or a keg of rum, intact, into the great tile tunnel and recover the liquor at his leisure.

Also, and grimly, Quintana had admitted that through this drain Eve Strayer and the State Troper, Stormont, had escaped from Clinch's Dump.

So now Sard, full of curiosity, went back into the pantry to look at it for himself.

Almost instantly the idea occurred to him to make use of the drain for his own safety and comfort.

Why shouldn't he sleep in the pantry, lock the door, and in case of intrusion—other exits being unavailable—why shouldn't he feel entirely safe with such an avenue of escape open?

For swimming was Sard's single accomplishment. He wasn't afraid of the water; he simply couldn't sink. Swimming was the only sport he ever had indulged in. He adored it.

And at that instant the very heavens echoed with that awful tomult which had first paralyzed, then crazed him in the woods.

In the bushes on the lake shore he saw animals leaping and racing, but, in his terror, he did not recognize them for dogs.

Then suddenly, he saw a man, close to the house running and another man not far behind. That he understood and it electrified him into action.

It was too late to escape from the house now. He understood that instantly.

He ran back through the dancehall and dining-room to the pantry; but he dared not let these intruders hear the noise of hammering.

Ungovernable terror seized Sard. Scarcely aware what he was about, he seized the edges of the big drain-pipe and crowded his obese body into it head first. He was so fat and heavy that he filled the tile. To start himself down he pulled with both hands and kicked himself forward, tortoise-like, down the slanting tunnel, sticking now and then, dragging himself on and downward.

There came a hitch somewhere; his heavy body stuck on the steep incline.

Then, as he lifted his bewildered head and strove to peer into the blackness in front, he saw four balls of green fire close to him in darkness.

He began to slide at the same instant, and flung out both hands to check himself. But his palms slid in the slime and his body slid after.

He shrieked once as his face struck a furry obstruction where four balls of green fire flamed horribly and a fury of murderous teeth tore his face and throat to bloody tatters as he slid lower, lower, settling through crimson-dyed waters into the icy depths of Star Pond.

Stormont, down by the lake, called to Darragh, who appeared on the veranda:

"Oh, Jim! Both otters crawled into the drain! I think your dogs must have killed one of them under water. There's a big patch of blood spreading off shore."

"Yes," said Darragh, "something has just been killed, somewhere. . . . Jack!"

"Yes?"

"Pull both your guns and come up here, quick!"

Old Southern Wisconsin Church Being Dismantled

Lake Geneva Wis.—The first church in Southern Wisconsin to have a pipe organ and one of the oldest church edifices in the state, has recently been dismantled and torn down. The Church of the Holy Communion, in Bloomfield near here had not been in use for several years and as a part of the tower was blown down last spring by a heavy wind it was thought best to raze the building completely to prevent vandalism.

The parish was erected in 1848 under the direction of Bishop Kemper and Mr. William H. Whiting, a pioneer resident. The church was erected the following year.

For many years the parish was served by different clergymen, but when the old families moved away, it was found expedient to close the building.

ELECTION TUESDAY WILL BE TEST OF ADMINISTRATION

NO CHANGE LIKELY IN POLITICAL CONTROL OF CONGRESS BUT DEMOCRATS SEEK MATERIAL GAINS

Washington, Nov. 3.—America's barometer of political and public opinion will be read at the polls, Thursday, November 7, when another national House of Representatives, more than a third of the Senate membership, and 32 governors of states, together with state legislatures and local officials, will be chosen.

Nationally, the general election Tuesday is the first of the Harding administration, thus it is regarded by many as a test, bearing upon the next Presidential campaign. The republican "ins" go before the country largely on the record of President Harding and the present congress, an issue accepted by their democratic and other opponents.

Excepting in Maine, where the elections were held last September, the new Seventy-sixth Congress of 435 members will be chosen Tuesday from all states. Thirty-seven Senators in 34 states also will be elected. The states electing governors are Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Progressive Party Gone

The battle of ballots throughout the country is largely between the dominant parties, Republican and Democratic. The election is marked by virtual passing of the Progressive, or Bull Moose party, Socialist, Prohibitionist, Farmer-Labor, Single Tax and other organizations, however, continue on the ballots here and there with some independent and other miscellaneous designations. Also marking the local campaigns, and often affecting the congressional contests, are the liquor, Ku Klux Klan and other questions.

Congressional candidates, mostly are for the Sixty-eighth Congress which will not assemble until December, 1923, unless a special session next summer is called. Of the 98 Senatorial seats at issue, 32 are for regular terms of six years beginning in the next five to fill vacancies by death and resignation. In addition to the 435 members of the next House to be chosen, there are three to fill vacancies in the coming winter session, two from Nebraska and one from Illinois.

Seek House Control

Capture of control of the next House the avowed objective of the democratic organizations or failing this, made at least a reduction of the present republican majority of 167. The House now has 296 republicans, 136 democrats and one socialist, with eight seats vacant. A turnover of more than 80 seats is required for loss of the next House by the republicans.

The Senate now has 59 republicans, 37 republican-progressive and 36 democrats, with 17 republicans and 15 democratic seats in the next Senate at issue Tuesday. Democratic leaders have said that only a miracle would change the political complexion of the next Senate at this election.

Republican leaders expect to increase their Senate majority by a few number, and they also say they expect defeat of a number of sitting House members, seen as two years ago in the Harding landslide. [illegible] on the other hand [illegible] Senate as well as [illegible] democratic Senator [illegible] republican [illegible] Harding [illegible] where Senator Pomerene, democrat, is opposed by Representative Fess, republican, former congressman and [illegible] Ohio, where Senator Reed, democrat, is opposed by R. Davis, Jr., democrat, hope of Senatorial gain largely are centered on: New York, where Senator Calder, republican, is opposed by Dr. Royal C. Copeland, New York health commissioner; New Jersey, where Senator Frelinghuysen, republican, is opposed by Governor Edwards, democrat; North Dakota, where former Gov. Lynn J. Frazier, republican with Non-Partisan league backing, is against J. P. T. O'Connor, democrat; Maryland, where Senator Ferris, republican, is fighting William Cabell Bruce; Indiana, where former Senator Albert J. Beveridge is pitted against former Governor Samuel M. Ralston; Connecticut, where Senator McLean, republican, is against Thomas J. Spellacy; Washington, where Senator Poindexter, republican, is against C. C. Dill, former Representative, and Michigan, where Senator Townsend, republican, is opposed by former Governor Ferris.

Primary Killed Three

There are 26 Senators who are candidates for continued service. Three, Senators McCumber, republican, N. D.; New, republican, Indiana and Culberson, democrat, Texas, were defeated for renomination, recent primaries, while three more whose terms expire March 3 next, Senators Page, republican, Vermont, Myers, democrat, Montana, and Williams, democrat, Mississippi, the retiring and did not stand for renomination.

There the two women candidates for the Senate from Minnesota and Wisconsin and a score for the House, with many others for municipal and other local offices. The present and first woman Senator, Mrs. W. H. Felton, of Georgia, appointed to succeed the late Sen. Watson is not a candidate for election, while the lone woman house member, Miss Alice Robertson of Oklahoma, is fighting for re-election in a normally democratic district.

For the 435 House seats there are 1,166 candidates, including 370 present members—249 republicans, 120 democrats and the one socialist. Fifty seven sitting members, 45 republicans and 11 democrats, did not seek re-election. Prominent among those are "Uncle Joe" Cannon and Representative Fordney of Michigan, chairman of the ways and means committee.

Fifty-seven House candidates are sure of winning Tuesday, being without opposition and some holding nominations of both republican and democratic parties. Of these 43 are democrats and 14 republicans.

Breaks in several solid state delegations to Congress are predicted. While the solid democratic contingents from southern states are expected to show no change, democratic leaders are predicting breaks in solid republican ranks now coming with Ohio, Nebraska, Connecticut, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota and possibly Oregon, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

Large Crowd At Port Auditorium For Benefit Show

One of the largest crowds that ever attended a moving picture entertainment at the Port Edwards auditorium enjoyed "Nanook of the North," a most unusual film presentation of Esquimaux life within the Arctic circle, last night. So realistic were the pictures and so absorbing the story of the struggle for existence in the frozen north, that those who watched were actually transported to the ice bound land of the midnight sun.

The hardships of life in the north, where existence itself is a constant struggle against the forces of nature, make a thrilling story, and intimate details of Esquimaux life supply many touches of human interest.

The members of the S. and R. club of Port Edwards, which is using the film for the benefit of welfare work in community, were highly gratified by the attendance last night, and are hopeful that the success may be repeated at the final performance this evening, in order that a substantial sum may be realized.

A feature of the entertainment last night was the singing of "The Land of the Mid-Night Sun" by John Hill of Port Edwards. The lights were turned low and a realistic representation of the "mid-night" sun shining over the ice and snow of the north made a very effective setting. The Misses Berdita McBain, Betty Nash, and Charlotte Arpin, in fairy costumes, dispensed ice cream and home-made candy during the performance.

WHAT RECEIVING SET SHALL I MAKE OR BUY?

THE SELECTION of a radio receiving set depends on two things the amount of money you can lay out and the distance you desire to receive from. With the layman it appears difficult to decide on what set to get but that is because you know less of radio than you do most other subjects but this will not be so very long with all the literature there is on the subject.

The radio waves which travel out in all directions from the sending station become weaker and weaker the farther they travel and in time become so weak they will not affect the most sensitive receiving set but the more sensitive your receiging set the more energy you pick up from stations.

Receiving sets vary in sensitiveness. Usually an expensive set has better means of detecting and increasing the signals while a cheap set will not receive from such distances.

For instance, a person located near a large broadcasting station can use an inexpensive receiving set with excellent results. On the other hand a person living 15 miles from that station would not hear anything from the same station, using the same kind of a set. He would then require a more sensitive set of the audion detector type which costs at least twice as much as the crystal detector type.

Your first consideration in the selection of your set should be what broadcasting station do I want to copy? How far are they located from me? Your next will be how long an antenna (aerial) can I rig up for the longer your antenna the more energy you will pick up. The more energy you pick up the less sensitive your receiving set must be in the first place. In other words, with a good aerial and a detector and one step, you may be able to do just as good work as your neighbor who has a small aerial and uses two steps of amplification.

If you are within 15 miles of a station you can put up a crystal receiving set costing from $15.00 to $25.00. This will give good results but you will have to wear telephones to hear them. The best feature of a crystal detector is that it gives you clear music and speech without distortion while an audion with a regenerative hook-up has a great tendency to distortion which spoils the program. Another advantage of the crystal is that it does not require oatterries of any kind, whereas the audion requires a 6 volt storage battery and a plate battery of 22½ volts, usually made of small dry cells. An audion detector runs the cost above the crystal set about $29.00 but for convenience and dependability give me the audion. It is to be compared to the crank way of starting your auto and the battery starter.

Every picture you see of radio equipment shows it in a neat box, highly polished, etc., but this is not necessary except for appearances. I have my honey comb or duo-lateral coil set laid out on an improvised table top. It takes up quite a lot of room but it is efficient and that is really what counts. The main thing in laying out your set is to be sure and have your connections to the grid and filament of the tubes short. Make them as short as possible, a couple of inches is ideal.

Referring to the cut. The switch on the extreme left is for the storage battery next are the primary and secondary variable condensers; back of them is the honey comb coil mounting; back of them are the B batteries; in front of them are the detector and two amplifying tubes; in front of them are the rheostats for the B battery and the other three for the filaments of the tubes; to the right are six binding posts for connecting three pairs of telephones and back of them is a double throw switch to switch over to my loud talker. Spare honey comb coils are on the extreme right. These are used for other wave lengths.

A diagram of this hookup is also shown.

In place of the honey comb coils you can use any tuner you have available. From the tuner on, the hookup will be the same.

POINTERS

The primary of loose coupler goes between the aerial and ground.

A counterpoise is better than a ground for sending.

Sending sets must be licensed to operate.

Fire underwriters have special rules regarding size of your ground wire.

NEXT LESSON—What Is The Use Of Having A Radio Station?

No Automobile License Required For Tractors

Madison, Wis.—Tractors operated by gasoline on city streets do not require an automobile license, John F. Baker, assistant attorney general, held today. He instructed Winifred G. Zabel, district attorney of Milwaukee county that such machines were not motor vehicles within the meaning of the statute.

"It should be noted that the state department for the last three or four years has been constructing the law to exclude tractors from the class of motor driven contrivances for the operation of which a license is required," Mr. Baker said.

Every thought generated in the brain is a seed which must produce its harvest—thistle or roses, weed or wheat.

Two Kinds of Battery Service

AN automobile battery that must be taken to the battery man once a week is demanding more service of the car owner to keep the battery in good condition than it gives in starting and lighting the car.

Globe Auto Batteries contain the elements of built in quality that insures the car owner of continuous starting and lighting service. Add a little water to the cells once in a while—keep the charging equipment in condition, and the Globe battery will always respond when you step on the starter or switch on the lights.

CHAPTER II

Guided by Quintana's directions, the three had made a wide detour to the east, steering by compass for the cross-roads beyond Star Pond.

In a dense growth of cedars, on a little ridge traversing wet land, Quintana halted to listen.

Sard and Sanchez, supposing him to be at their heels, continued on, pushing their way blindly through the cedars, clinging to the hard ridge in terror of sink-holes. But their progress was very slow; and they were still in sight, fighting a painful path amid the evergreens, when Quintana suddenly squatted close to the moist earth behind a juniper bush.

At first, except for the threshing of Sard and Sanchez through the massed obstructions ahead, there was not a sound in the woods.

But, presently, came a soft, swift rhythm like the pace of a forest creature in haste—a discreetly hurrying tread which was more a series of light earth-shocks than sound.

Quintana, kneeling on one knee, lifted his pistol. He already felt the slight vibration of the ground on the hard ridge. The cedars were moving just beyond him now. He waited until, through the parted foliage a face appeared.

The loud report of his pistol struck Sard with the horror of paralysis. Sanchez faced about with one spring, snarling, a weapon in either hand.

In the terrible silence they could hear something heavy floundering in the bushes, choking, moaning, thudding on the ground.

Sanchez began to creep back; Sard, more dead than alive, crawled at his heels. Presently they saw Quintana, waist deep in juniper, looking down at something.

And when they drew closer they saw Georgiades lying on his back under a cedar, the whole front of his shirt from chest to belly a sopping mess of blood.

There seemed no need of explanation. The dead Greek lay there where he had not been expected, and his two pistols lay beside him where they had fallen.

Sanchez looked stealthily at Quintana who said softly:

"Bien sure . . . . In his left side pocket, I believe."

Sanchez laid a cool hand on the dead man's heart; then, satisfied, rummaged until he found Georgiades' share of the loot.

Sard, hurriedly displaying a pair of clean but shaky hands, made the division.

When the three men had silently pocketed what was allotted to each, Quintana pushed curiously at the dead man with the toe of his shoe.

"Yeste!" he remarked. "I had place, for security, a ver' large diamon' in my pistol barrel. Now it is within the interior of this gentleman. . . ." He turned to Sanchez: I sell him to you. One sapphire. Yes?"

Sanchez shook his head with a slight sneer: "We wait—if you want your diamond, mon capitaine."

Quintana hesitated, then made a grimace and shook his head.

"No," he said. "he has swallow. Let him digest. Allons! March!"

But after they had gone on—two hundred yards, perhaps—Sanchez stopped.

"Well?" inquired Quintana. Then with a sneer: "I now recollec' that once you have been a butcher in Madrid. . . . Suit your tas'e, Pami Sanchez."

Sard gazed at Sanchez out of sickened eyes.

"You keep away from me until you've washed yourself," he burst out, revolted. "Don't you come near me till you're clean!"

Quintana laughed and seated himself. Sanchez, with a hang-dog glance at him, turned and sneaked back on the trail they had traversed. him fish out a Spanish knife from his hip pocket and unclasp it.

Sanchez made no effort to find them. They had been gone half an hour, before he had finished the business that had turned him back.

As he stood there, examining his clothing, and washing what he could of the ominous stains from sleeve and shoe, very far away to the north he heard a curious noise—a far, faint sound such as he never before had heard.

If it were a voice of any sort there was nothing human about it. . . . Probably some sort of unknown bird . . . Perhaps a bird of prey. . . . . That was natural, considering the attraction that Georgiades would have for such creatures. . . . If it were a bird it must be a large one, he thought. . . . Because there was a certain volume to the cry. . . . . Some unknown beast of the forest. . . .

Sanchez was suddenly afraid, Scarcely knowing what he was doing he began to run along the edge of the bog.

He was tired, or thought he was, but, the alarming sounds were filling his ears now; the entire forest seemed full of them, echoing in all directions, coming in upon him from everywhere, so that he knew not in which direction to run.

The next instant he fell headlong over a ledge, struck water, felt himself whirled around in the icy, rushing current, rolled over, tumbled through rapids, blinded, deafened choked, swept helplessly in a vast green wall of water toward something that thundered in his brain an instant, then dashed it into roaring chaos.

Half a mile down the turbulent outlet of Star Pond—where a great sheet of green water pours thirty feet into the tossing foam below—and spinning, dipping, diving, bobbing up like a lost log after the drive, the body of Senor Sanchez danced all alone in the wilderness, spilling from soggy pockets diamonds sapphires, rubies, emeralds, into crystal caves where only the shadows of slim trout stirred.

Very far away to the eastward Quintana stood listening, clutching Sard by one sleeve to silence him.

Presently he said: "My frien', somebody is hunting with houn's in this fores'.

"Don't leave me!" gasped the terrified diamond broker. "I dont know where to go—

Quintana faced him abruptly—with a terrifying smile and glimmer of white teeth—and shoved a pistol into the fold of fat beneath Sard's double chin:

"You hear those dogs? Yes? Ver' well; I also. Run, now. I say to you run ver' damn quick. He! Houp! Allez vous en! Beat eet!"

He struck Sard a stinging blow on his fleshy ear with the pistol barrel, and Sard gave a muffled shriek which was more like the squeak of a frightened animal.

"My God, Quintana—" he sobbed: Then Quintana's eyes blazed murder and Sard turned and ran lumbering through the thicket like a stampeded ox, crashing on amid withered brake white birch scrub and brier, not knowing whither he was headed, crazed with terror.

Sard could not run very fast. He could scarcely stand when he pulled up and clung to the trunk of a tree

More dead than alive he embraced the tree, gulping horribly for air, every fat-incrusted organ laboring his senses swimming.

And now, directly ahead, he saw clear gray sky low through the trees. The wood's edge!

He began to run.

As he emerged from the edge of the woods, waist-deep in brush and weeds, wide before his blood-shot eyes spread Star Pond.

Even in his half-stupefied brain there was memory enough left for recognition.

He remembered the lake. His gaze traveled to the westward: and he saw Clinch's Dump standing below, stark, silent, the doors swinging open in the wind.

And after a long while he ventured to waddle nearer, slinking through brush and frosted boulders, edging always closer and closer to that silent house where nothing moved except the wind-blown door.

And now, at last, he set a furtive foot upon the threshold, tip-toed in, peered here and there, sidled to the dining room, peered in.

When, at length, Emanuel Sard discovered that Clinch Dump was tenantless, he made straight for the pantry. Here was cheese, crackers an apple pie, half a dozen bottles of home-brew beer.

He loaded his arms with all they could carry, stole through the dance-hall out to the veranda, which overlooked the lake.

And here Sard slaked his raging thirst and satiated the knawing appetite of the obese, than which there is no cruel torment to an inert liver and distended paunch.

Munching, guzzling, watching, Sard squatted just within the veranda doorway, anxiously considering his chances.

In all that panorama of forest, swale and water the only thing that had alarmed him at all by moving was something in the water. When first he noticed it he almost swooned, for he took it to be a swimming dog.

In his agitation he had arisen to his feet; and then the swiming creature almost frightened Sard out of his senses, for it tilted suddenly and went down with a retort like the crack of a pistol.

He dimly remembered hearing that beavers behaved that way.

Watching the water he saw the thing out there in the lake again, swimming in erratic circles, its big, dog-like head well out of the water.

It certainly was no dog. A beaver maybe. Whatever it was, Sard didn't care any longer.

Shivering, Sard filled his mouth with apple-pie and cheese and pulled the cork from another bottle of home-brew beer.

CHAPTER III

About that time, a mile and a half to the southward, James Darragh came out on the rocky and rushing outlet of Star Pond.

Over his shoulder was a rifle, and all around him ran dogs—big, powerful dogs, built like foxhounds but with rough, wiry coats of Airedales, even rougher of ear and features.

He had been seated there for ten minutes, possibly, with his tired dogs lying around him, when just above him he saw a State Troper emerge from the woods on foot, carrying a rifle over one shoulder.

"Jack!" he called in a guarded voice.

Trooper Stormont turned, caught sight of Darragh, made a signal of recognition and came toward him.

Darragh said: "Your mate, Trooper Lannis, is down stream. I've two of my own game wardens at the cross-roads, two more on the Ghost Lake Road, and two foresters and an inspector out toward Owl Marsh."

Stormont nodded, looking down at the dogs.

"What are they, Jim?"

"Otter-hounds," said Darragh, "—a breed of my own . . . But that's all they are capable of hunting, I guess," he added grimly.

Stormont's gaze questioned him.

"Well," said Darragh, "I left my two guests at Harrod Place to amuse each other, got out three couple of my otter-hounds and started them—as I hoped and supposed—on Quintana's trail."

"What happened?" inquired Stormont curiously.

"Well—I don't know. I think they were following some of Quintana's gang—for a while, anyway. After that. God knows—deer, hare, cottontail—I don't know. They yelled their bally heads off—I on the run—they're slow dogs, you know—and whatever they were after either fooled them or there were too many trails . . . I made a mistake, that's all. These poor beasts don't know anything except an otter. I just hoped they might take Quintana's trail if I put them on it."

They had been walking for twenty minutes, possibly, exchanging scarcely a word, and they were now nearing the hilly basin where Star Pond lay, when Darragh said abruptly:

"I'm going to tell you about things, Jack. You've taken my word so far that it's all right—"

"Naturally," said Stormont simply.

The two men, who had been brother officers in the Great War, glanced at each other, slightly smiling.

"Here it is then," said Darragh. "When I was on duty in Riga for the Intelligence Department, I met two ladies in dire distress, whose mansion had been burned and looted, supposedly by the Bolsheviki.

"They were actually hungry and penniless; the only clothing they possessed they were wearing. These ladies were the Countess Orloff-Strelwitz and a young girl, Theodorica, Grand Duchess of Esthonia . . . I did what I could for them. After a while, I found out that the crime had been perpetrated by Jose Quintana's gang of international crooks masquerading as Bolsheviki."

Stormont nodded: "I also came across similar cases," he remarked.

"Well, this was a flagrant example. Quintana had burnt the chateau and had made off with over two million dollars worth of the little Grand Duchess's jewels—among them the famous Erosite gem known as The Flaming Jewel."

"I've heard of it."

"I've been after him ever since . . . But, Jack, until this morning Quintana did not possess these stolen jewels. Clinch did!"

"What!"

"Clinch served overseas in a Forestry Regiment. In Paris he robbed Quintana of these jewels. That's why I've been hanging around Clinch."

Stormont's face was flushed and incredulous. Then it lost color as he thought of the jewels that Eve had concealed—the gems for which she risked her life.

He said: "But you tell me Quintana robbed you this morning."

"He did. The little Grand Duchess and the Countess Orloff-Strelwitz are my guests at Harrod Place.

"Last night I snatched the case containing these gems from Quintana's fingers. This morning, as I offered them to the Grand Duchess, Quintana coolly stepped between us—"

His voice became bitter and his features reddened with rage poorly controlled:

"By God, Jack, I should have shot Quintana when the opportunity offered. Twice I've had the chance. The next time I shall kill him any way I can . . . Legitimately."

"Of course," said Stormont gravely. But his mind was full of the jewels which Eve had. What and whose were they—if Quintana again had the Esthonian gems in his possession?

A few minutes later, as they came out among the willows and alders on the northeast side of Star Pond, Stormont touched his comrade's arm.

"Look at that enormous dog-otter out there in the lake!"

And now the hounds, unleashed, lifted frantic voices. The very sky seemed full of the discordant tumult; wood and shore reverberated with the volume of convulsive and dissonant baying.

"Damn it," said Darragh, disgusted, "—that's what they've been trailing all the while across-woods—that devilish dog-otter yonder . . . And I had hoped they were on Quintana's trail".

A mass rush and scurry of crazed dogs nearly swept him off his feet, and both men caught a glimpse of a large bitch-otter taking to the lake from a ledge of rock just beyond.

"Well, I'm in for it now," muttered Darragh, starting along the bank toward Clinch's Dump, to keep an eye on his dogs.

Stormont followed more leisurely.

CHAPTER IV

A few minutes before Darragh and Stormont had come out on the farther edge of Star Pond, Sard, who had heard from Quintana about the big drain pipe which led from Clinch's pantry into the lake, decided to go in and take a look at it.

He had been told all about its uses—how Clinch—in the event of a raid by State Troopers or Government enforcement agents—could empty his contraband hootch into the lake if necessary—and even could slide a barrel of ale or a keg of rum, intact, into the great tile tunnel and recover the liquor at his leisure.

Also, and grimly, Quintana had admitted that through this drain, Eve Strayer and the State Troper, Stormont, had escaped from Clinch's Dump.

So now Sard, full of curiosity, went back into the pantry to look at it for himself.

Almost instantly the idea occurred to him to make use of the drain for his own safety and comfort.

Why shouldn't he sleep in the pantry, lock the door, and in case of intrusion—other exits being unavailable—why shouldn't he feel entirely safe with such an avenue of escape open?

For swimming was Sard's single accomplishment. He wasn't afraid of the water; he simply couldn't sink. Swimming was the only sport he ever had indulged in. He adored it.

And at that instant the very heavens echoed with that awful tumult which had first paralyzed, then crazed him in the woods.

In the bushes on the lake shore he saw animals leaping and racing, but, in his terror, he did not recognize them for dogs.

Then suddenly, he saw a man, close to the house running and another man not far behind. That he understood and it electrified him into action.

It was too late to escape from the house now. He understood that instantly.

He ran back through the dancehall and dining-room to the pantry; but he dared not let these intruders hear the noise of hammering.

Ungovernable terror seized Sard. Scarcely aware what he was about, he seized the edges of the big drain-pipe and crowded his obese body into it head first. He was so fat and heavy that he filled the tile. To start himself down he pulled with both hands and kicked himself forward, tortoise-like, down the slanting tunnel, sticking now and then, dragging himself on and downward.

There came a hitch somewhere; his heavy body stuck on the steep incline.

Then, as he lifted his bewildered head and strove to peer into the blackness in front, he saw four balls of green fire close to him in darkness.

He began to slide at the same instant, and flung out both hands to check himself. But his palms slid in the slime and his body slid after.

He shrieked once as his face struck a furry obstruction where four balls of green fire flamed horribly and a fury of murderous teeth tore his face and throat to bloody tatters as he slid lower, lower, settling through crimson-dyed waters into the icy depths of Star Pond.

Stormont, down by the lake, called to Darragh, who appeared on the veranda:

"Oh, Jim! Both otters crawled into the drain! I think your dogs must have killed one of them under water. There's a big patch of blood spreading off shore."

"Yes," said Darragh, "something has just been killed, somewhere. . . . Jack!"

"Yes?"

"Pull both your guns and come up here, quick!"

Old Southern Wisconsin Church Being Dismantled

Lake Geneva Wis.—The first church in Southern Wisconsin to have a pipe organ and one of the oldest church edefices in the state, has recently been dismantled and torn down. The Church of the Holy Communion, in Bloomfield near here had not been in use for several years and as a part of the tower was blown down last spring by a heavy wind it was thought best to raze the building completely to prevent vandalism.

The parish was erected in 1848 under the direction of Bishop Kemper and Mr. William H. Whiting, a pioneer resident. The church was erected the following year.

For many years the parish was served by different clergymen, but when the old families moved away, it was found expedient to close the building.

WARRING BIG 10 FORGETS FIGHTS FOR BIG GAMES

ILLINI CLASHES WITH NORTHWESTERN AND BADGERS TACKLE GOPHERS IN ONLY CONTESTS IN CONFERENCE

(By Associated Press)

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 4—The war of words in the western conference was made a side issue today for a few hours while plunging attacks and charging lines attracted the interest of football fans.

Illinois and Wisconsin, whose charges against each other, ranging from violation of rules against professionalism to profanation of principles and ethics set the conference agog, have more laudable victories in mind in today's football games.

Only Two Playing

Incidentally, these two warring institutions engage in the only two regular conference games today. Wisconsin meets Minnesota at Minneapolis in the most important struggle in the middle west.

Northwestern has invaded the camp of the Illini. Three teams—Iowa, Ohio State, and Chicago—are idle, while Michigan, Indiana and Purdue clash with teams outside the Big Ten.

Hula Libel On Hawaiian Race Leading Citizens Say

Honolulu, T. H.—Two ancient and forgotten laws on the statute books of Hawaii which still are effective could be invoked to suppress the hula-hula dance of Hawaii, which is usually performed by a grass-skirted woman, according to an announcement by territorial Attorney-General John A. Mathewman in connection with recent efforts to abolish the hula exhibitions, now given mainly for the entertainment of tourists.

The announcement followed the adoption of a resolution by the Hawaiian Civic Club, composed of leading Hawaiians, denouncing the Hula, as a "libel upon the Hawaiian race and its customs."

Judge Mathewman said that the two laws which might be enforced against exhibitions had been on the statutes of the territory for many years—one since 1850 and the second since 1896, this having been adopted when Hawaii was a republic.

In connection with the campaign against the hula, Vaughan MacCaughey, territorial superintendent of schools, while addressing the Honolulu Ad Club, declared that the "so-called high society dancing which is seen at leading social events is more immoral than the hula."

A TRIBUNE Want Ad will sell it.

Bay Seeks State Scholastic Grid Title Tournament

Green Bay, Wis., Nov. 4—All claimants for the interscholastic football championship of Wisconsin are being invited by the sporting fans and officials of Green Bay to send their contending elevens here at some date this fall to battle for the premier honors. The State Interscholastic Athletic Association is said to be looking favorably on awarding the tournament to Green Bay as this city is the first to hand in its bid for the classic. The plan of the committee working for the tournament, is to have all leading elevens throughout the state play one another and by a process of elimination have the championship fray between the two remaining undefeated teams. This arrangement would necessitate at least two or three days of playing.

Four Strong Teams

Reports from various towns and cities throughout the state indicate that La Crosse, Superior Central, Marinette and Edgerton rank at the top of the probable competitors while Fort Atkinson, Sheboygan, Waukesha, Stevens Point and Monroe are also represented by especially strong teams.

The success of such a tournament is practically assured, according to sporting officials here. Green Bay and vicinity are stanch supporters of the game and with Marinette and Superior representing the northern part of the state, and with southern Wisconsin teams representing their respective sections, the tournament is sure to draw large crowds if held.

Hooper Raps Ford, Hearst And Gompers In Statement

Chicago, Ill.—Edsel Ford and Henry Ford, referred to as "Edsel's papa," are featured in a spirited statement issued by Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States railroad labor board, as a reply to criticism by what Mr. Hooper terms" the new triumvirate of Hearst, Gompers and Ford."

The statement came as Chairman Hooper's first recognition of attacks directed against the labor board's recent majority opinion rejecting "the living wage theory "advanced by railway labor spokesmen. This principle given strict application, would give common laborers a minimum wage of about 72 cents an hour, according to some estimates.

Two White Horse Pike, a sixty-mile concrete highway connecting Philadelphia with Atlantic City, is to be opened today with an elaborate parade and pageant.

Woman Candidate's Chief Interests Home and Family

MRS. MATHILDA BOORMAN, ASPIRANT TO SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE, PLACES POLITICS SECOND

"I was orphaned at the age of one and one-half years by the death of my father who was killed in the civil war. To that event I attribute the hatred of war that caused me to turn actively toward the Socialist party at the outbreak of the great war."

Thus are her party affiliations explained by Mrs. Mathilde Boorman, Wisconsin's first woman candidate for any state office, and Wisconsin Rapids' only representative on any of the party tickets for state office. Mrs. Boorman is the Socialist party candidate for Secretary of State.

A resident of Wisconsin Rapids since her marriage to Dr. C. A. Boorman 24 years ago next Wednesday, Mrs. Boorman's interest in politics has always been and still continues to be secondary to her interest in her home.

Home First Duty

"We women are the home-makers," she told a representative of the Tribune, "that is our primary duty and privilege, and I cannot help but believe that the failure of many women to successfully acquit themselves of this responsibility is the cause of many of our ills which mere political reform can never cure. As home-makers, however, we naturally have a very deep interest in the affairs of government, many of which touch us very closely, and I think it is only natural and right that women should desire and take an active part in the making and enforcement of our laws."

Mrs. Boorman was born in Montello, Marquette county, where following the death of her father in the civil war she lived with her mother for about eight years. The family then moved to Madison, where her mother remarried and where Mrs. Boorman received her education.

Completing her school work, she became a stenographer and gained her first contact with political life through assisting in the Harrison-Cleveland campaign. She was also for a time in the employe of R. C. Richmond, Prohibition party candidate for governor. In the fall of 1888 she married Dr. C. A. Boorman, and came to this city, where five boys and two girls, five of whom are now living were born and brought up. One son, Curtis, served with the American army overseas and was with the forces that occupied Metz shortly before the Armistice.

Is Foe of Liquor

Questioned in regard to her position on the Prohibition question, Mrs. Boorman replied that she was strongly opposed to the return of the saloon and was a foe of liquor in any form, but that she felt that the return of light wines and beer through a modification of the existing laws to be preferable to the continuance of the present reign of moonshine and bootleg whiskey. She favors the handling of prescription whiskey directly by the federal government.

As stated heretofore, Mrs. Boorman dates her active affiliation with the Socialist party from the opening of the great war in Europe. Her interest in the Socialist movement originated years before, however, and her present membership in the party is founded upon her support of the party's social and economic program, as well as upon its attitude toward war.

"I am a socialist," she stated, "because I see in the Socialist party the only constructive remedy for present economic conditions. I have always had a great sympathy for poor people and in Socialism I see the only opportunity for making their lives better and happier."

Mrs. Boorman favors a bonus for the soldiers who served overseas in the great war, but does not believe it essential for those who were merely in the training camps on this side of the water. "If they had conscripted wealth to pay for the war I would not be in favor of a bonus of any sort, but inasmuch as those who did not fight were permitted to gain riches out of the war, I believe that the boys who made the great sacrifices involved in service on the battle fields of Europe should have some additional reward."

Nomination a Surprise

Although she has been active in the work of the Socialist party of the state during the last few years, Mrs. Boorman never aspired to political office, and the action of the Socialist convention at Milwaukee in nominating her for Secretary of State came as a great surprise. After refusing the nomination for Lieutenant Governor, which was first tendered her, she accepted that of Secretary of State because she felt it a woman's duty to do her part in carrying on the movement in which she believed.

State Accounts Are Only Two Cents Off In 2 Years

Madison, Wis.—State funds are handled with care, with such scrupulous care, Henry Johnson, state treasurer, says, that in two years with hundreds of thousands of dollars involved, a difference of but two cents was found between state accounts and those of banks with which it was doing business.

Writing to the state treasurer the president of one large banking institution said. "In compliance with your letter we have debited your account with the sum of two cents, thus adjusting the difference between our statement and your books.

"I wonder if voters of the state realize how carefully public money is handled. When one stops to think of the many thousands of dollars that have gone through this account and a two cent adjustment is all that is necessary at the end of a two year period, the record is indeed remarkable."

Treasurer Johnson says that under the present system of handling public funds there is no opening for a leak of any kind.

Stevens Point, Wis.—The Eau Claire Normal football team, outplaying the Stevens Point normal eleven, won Friday afternoon on the fair ground, 10 to 3.

Eau Claire's eleven, in better condition than the Pointers, had the edge on the playing for two periods, and in those two quarters put over enough to sew up the battle.

Civilization follows the Cow and the Hen

A good diet makes for leadership.

The cow and the hen—butter and eggs—are the source of national efficiency because they keep folks well fed—and no nation or individual ever forged ahead on an empty stomach.

"The people who have achieved, who have become large, strong and vigorous people, who have the best trades in the world, and who are progressive in science and in every activity of human intellect—these are the people who have used butter and eggs liberally."

Butter is a concentrated food: is much more than a fat; it is rich in Vitamines—that essential element which gives you the 'pep' you need, the nourishment you must have and the nerves so essential.

Eggs—Nature's "Original Sealed Package"—are your mainstay for health, convenience and economy. No housewife should stint on Butter and Eggs.

ELECTION TUESDAY WILL BE TEST OF ADMINISTRATION

NO CHANGE LIKELY IN POLITICAL CONTROL OF CONGRESS BUT DEMOCRATS SEEK MATERIAL GAINS

Washington, Nov. 3.—America's barometer of political and public opinion will be read at the polls, Thursday, November 7, when another national House of Representatives, more than a third of the Senate membership, and 32 governors of states, together with state legislatures and local officials, will be chosen.

Nationally, the general election Tuesday is the first of the Harding administration, thus it is regarded by many as a test, bearing upon the next Presidential campaign. The republican "ins" go before the country largely on the record of President Harding and the present congress, an issue accepted by their democratic and other opponents.

Excepting in Maine, where the elections were held last September, the new Sixty-eighth Congress of 435 members will be chosen Tuesday from all states. Thirty-seven Senators in 34 states also will be elected. The states electing governors are Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Progressive Party Gone

The battle of ballots throughout the country is largely between the dominant parties, Republican and Democratic. The election is marked by virtual passing of the Progressive, or Bull Moose party. Socialist, Prohibitionist, Farmer-Labor, Single Tax and other organizations, however, continue on the ballots here and there with some independent and other miscellaneous designations. Also marking the local campaigns, and often affecting the congressional contests, are the liquor, Ku Klux Klan and other questions.

Congressional candidates mostly are for the Sixty-eighth Congress which will not assemble until December, 1923, unless a special session next sumer is called. Of the 38 Senatorial seats at issue, 32 are for regular terms of six years beginning in the next five to fill vacancies by death and resignation. In addition to the 435 members of the next House to be chosen, there are three to fill vacancies in the coming winter session, two from Nebraska and one from Illinois.

Seek House Control

Capture of control of the next House is the avowed objective of the democratic organizations or, failing this, material reduction of the present republican majority of 165. The House now has 296 republicans, 130 democrats and one socialist, with eight seats vacant. A turnover of more than 80 seats is required for loss of the next House by the republicans.

The Senate now has 59 republicans, one republican-progresive and 36 democrats, with 17 republicans and 15 democratic seats in the next Senate at issue Tuesday. Democratic leaders have said that only a miracle would change the political complexion of the next Senate at this election.

Republican leaders expect to increase their Senate majority by a few members, and they also say they expect defeat of a number of sitting House members, swept in two years ago in the Harding victory. Democratic managers on the other hand are predicting some Senate as well as House accessions. Principal spots where republicans hope to oust democratic Senators and elect republicans are: Ohio, President Harding's state, where Senator Pomerene, democrat, is opposed by Representative Fess, republican, former congressional committee chairman; Missouri, where Senator Reed, democrat, is opposed by R. R. Brewster, Rhode Island, where Senator Gerry, democrat, is pitted against former governor Beeksman; Nebraska, where Senator Hitchcock, democrat, ad former foreign relations committee chairman, is fighting R. R. Howell, republican national committeeman; Wyoming, where Representative Mondell, republican leader in the House, is running against Senator Kendrick, democrat; Utah, where Senator King, democrat, is seeking re-election against former Governor Bamberger, and New Mexico, where Senator Jones, democrat, is opposed by Stephen B. Davis, Jr., Democratic hopes of Senatorial gains largely are centered on: New York, where Senator Calder, republican, is opposed by Dr. Royal C. Copeland, New York health commissioner; New Jersey, where Senator Frelinghuysen, republican is opposed by Governor Edwards, democrat; North Dakota, where former Gov. Lynn J. Frazier, republican with Non-Partisan league backing is against J. F. T. O'Connor, democrat; Maryland, where Senator France, republican, is fighting William Cabell Bruce; Indiana, where former Senator Albert J. Beveridge is pitted against former Governor Samuel M. Ralston; Connecticut, where Senator McLean, republican, is against Thomas J. Spellacy; Washington, where Senator Poindexter republican, is against C. C. Dill, former Representative, and Michigan, where Senator Townsend, republican, is opposed by former Governor Ferris.

Primary Killed Three

There are 26 Senators who are candidates for continued service. Three, Senators McCumber, republican, N. D. New republican, Indiana and Culberson, democrat, Texas, were defeated for renomination, recent primaries, while three more whose terms expire March 3 next, Senators Page, republican, Vermont, Myers, democrat, Montana, and Williams, democrat, Mississippi, the retiring and did not stand for renomination.

There the two women candidates for the Senate from Minnesota and Wisconsin and a score for the House, with many others for municipal and other local offices. The present and first woman Senator, Mrs. W. H. Felton, of Georgia, appointed to succeed the late Sen. Watson is not a candidate for election, while the lone woman house member, Miss Alice Robertson of Oklahoma, is fighting for re-election in a normally democratic district.

For the 435 House seats there are 1,106 candidates, including 370 present members—249 republicans, 120 democrats and the one socialist. Fifty seven sitting members, 46 republicans and 11 democrats, did not seek re-election. Prominent among those are "Uncle Joe" Cannon and Representative Fordney of Michigan, chairman of the ways and means committee.

Fifty-seven House candidates are sure of winning Tuesday, being without opposition and some holding nominations of both republican and democratic parties. Of these 43 are democrats and 14 republicans.

Breaks in several solid state delegations to Congress are predicted While the solid democratic contingents from southern states are expected to show no change, democratic leaders are predicting breaks in solid republican ranks now coming with Ohio, Nebraska, Connecticut, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota and possibly Oregon, West Virginia and Wisconsin.

Large Crowd At Port Auditorium For Benefit Show

One of the largest crowds that ever attended a moving picture entertainment at the Port Edwards auditorium enjoyed "Nanook of the North," a most unusual film presentation of Esquimaux life within the Arctic circle, last night. So realistic were the pictures and so absorbing the story of the struggle for existence in the frozen north, that those who watched were actually transported to the ice bound land of the midnight sun.

The hardships of life in the north, where existence itself is a constant struggle against the forces of nature, make a thrilling story, and intimate details of Esquimaux life supply many touches of human interest.

The members of the S. and R. club of Port Edwards, which is using the film for the benefit of welfare work in community, were highly gratified by the attendance last night, and are hopeful that the success may be repeated at the final performance this evening, in order that a substantial sum may be realized.

A feature of the entertainment last night was the singing of "The Land of the Mid-Night Sun" by John Hill of Port Edwards. The lights were turned low and a realistic representation of the "mid-night" sun shining over the ice and snow of the north made a very effective setting. The Misses Berdita McBain, Betty Nash, and Charlotte Arpin, in fairy costumes, dispensed ice cream and home-made candy during the performance.

WHAT RECEIVING SET SHALL I MAKE OR BUY?

THE SELECTION of a radio receiving set depends on two things the amount of money you can lay out and the distance you desire to receive from. With the layman it appears difficult to decide on what set to get but that is because you know less of radio than you do most other subjects but this will not be so very long with all the literature there is on the subject.

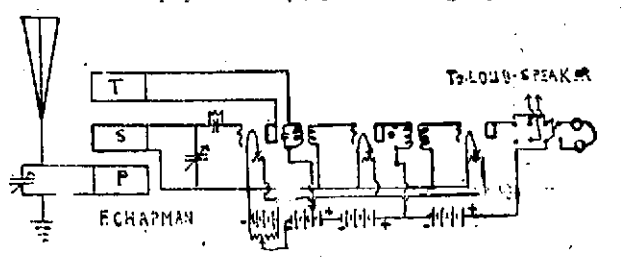
The radio waves which travel out in all directions from the sending station become weaker and weaker the farther they travel and in time become so weak they will not affect the most sensitive receiving set but the more sensitive your receiving set the more energy you pick up from stations.

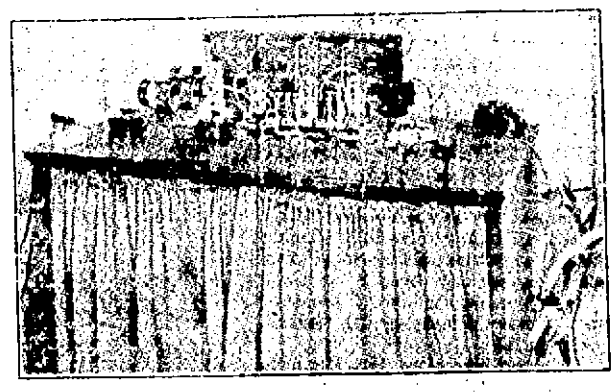
Receiving sets vary in sensitiveness. Usually an expensive set has better means of detecting and increasing the signals while a cheap set will not receive from such distances.

For instance, a person located near a large broadcasting station can use an inexpensive receiving set with excellent results. On the other hand a person living 75 miles from that station would not hear anything from the same station, using the same kind of a set. He would then require a more sensitive set of the audion detector type which costs at least twice as much as the crystal detector type.

Your first consideration in the selection of your set should be what broadcasting station do I want to copy? How far are they located from me? Your next will be how long an antenna (aerial) can I rig up for the longer your antenna the more energy you will pick up. The more energy you pick up the less sensitive your receiving set must be in the first place. In other words, with a good aerial and a detector and one step, you may be able to do just as good work as your neighbor who has a small aerial and uses two steps of amplification.

If you are within 15 miles of a station you can put up a crystal receiving set costing from $15.00 to $25.00. This will give good results but you will have to wear telephones to hear them. The best feature of a crystal detector is that it gives you clear music and speech without distortion while an audion with a regenerative hook-up has a great tendency to distortion which spoils the program. Another advantage of the crystal is that it does not require batterries of any kind, whereas the audion requires a 6 volt storage battery and a plate battery of 22½ volts, usually made of small dry cells. An audion detector runs the cost above the crystal set about $29.00 but for convenience and dependability give me the audion. It is to be compared to the crank way of starting your auto and the battery starter.





Every picture you see of radio equipment shows it in a neat box, highly polished, etc., but this is not necessary except for appearances. I have my honey comb or duo-lateral coil set laid out on an improvised table top. It takes up quite a lot of room but it is efficient and that is really what counts. The main thing in laying out your set is to be sure and have your connections to the grid and filament of the tubes short. Make them as short as possible, a couple of inches is ideal.

Referring to the cut. The switch on the extreme left is for the storage battery next are the primary and secondary variable condensers; back of them is the honey comb coil mounting; back of them are the B batteries; in front of them are the detector and two amplifying tubes; in front of them are the rheostats for the B battery and the other three for the filaments of the tubes; to the right are six binding posts for connecting three pairs of telephones and back of them is a double throw switch to switch over to my loud talker. Spare honey comb coils are on the extreme right. These are used for other wave lengths.

A diagram of this hookup is also shown.

In place of the honey comb coils you can use any tuner you have available. From the tuner on, the hookup will be the same.

POINTERS

The primary of loose coupler goes between the aerial and ground.

A counterpoise is better than a ground for sending.

Sending sets must be licensed to operate.

Fire underwriters have special rules regarding size of your ground wire.

No Automobile License Required For Tractors

Madison, Wis.—Tractors operated by gasoline on city streets do not require an automobile license, John F. Baker, assistant attorney general, held today. He instructed Winifred G. "It should be noted that the state department for the last three or four years has been constructing the law to exclude tractors from the class of motor driven contrivances for the operation of which a license is required," Mr. Baker said.

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 4—The war of words in the western conference was made a side issue today for a few hours while plunging attacks and charging lines attracted the interest of football fans.

Illinois and Wisconsin, whose charges against each other, ranging from violation of rules against professionalism to profanation of principles and ethics set the conference agog, have more laudable victories in mind in today's football games.

Only Two Playing

Incidentally, these two warring institutions engage in the only two regular conference games today. Wisconsin meets Minnesota at Minneapolis in the most important struggle in the middle west.

Northwestern has invaded the camp of the Illini. Three teams—Iowa, Ohio State, and Chicago—are idle, while Michigan, Indiana and Purdue clash with teams outside the Big Ten.

Hula Libel On Hawaiian Race Leading Citizens Say

Honolulu, T. H.—Two ancient and forgotten laws on the statute books of Hawaii which still are effective could be invoked to suppress the hula-hula dance of Hawaii, which is usually performed by a grass-skirted woman, according to an announcement by territorial Attorney-General John A. Mathewman in connection with recent efforts to abolish the hula exhibitions, now given mainly for the entertainment of tourists.

The announcement followed the adoption of a resolution by the Hawaiian Civic Club, composed of leading Hawaiians, denouncing the Hula, as a "libel upon the Hawaiian race and its customs."

Judge Mathewman said that the two laws which might be enforced against exhibitions had been on the statutes of the territory for many years—one since 1850 and the second since 1896, this having been adopted when Hawaii was a republic.

In connection with the campaign against the hula, Vaughan MacCaughey, territorial superintendent of schools, while addressing the Honolulu Ad. Club, declared that the "so-called high society dancing which is seen at leading social events is more immoral than the hula."

Bay Seeks State Scholastic Grid Title Tournament

Green Bay, Wis., Nov. 4—All claimants for the interscholastic football championship of Wisconsin are being invited by the sporting fans and officials of Green Bay to send their contending elevens here at some date this fall to battle for the premier honors. The State Interscholastic Athletic Association is said to be looking favorably on awarding the tournament to Green Bay as this city is the first to hand in its bid for the classic. The plan of the committee working for the tournament, is to have all leading elevens throughout the state play one another and by a process of elimination have the championship fray between the two remaining undefeated teams. This arrangement would necessitate at least two or three days of playing.

Four Strong Teams

Reports from various towns and cities throughout the state indicate that La Crosse, Superior Central, Marinette and Edgerton rank at the top of the probable competitors while Fort Atkinson, Sheboygan, Waukesha, Stevens Point and Monroe are also represented by especially strong teams.

The success of such a tournament is practically assured, according to sporting officials here. Green Bay and vicinity are stanch supporters of the game and with Marinette and Superior representing the northern part of the state, and with southern Wisconsin teams representing their respective sections, the tournament is sure to draw large crowds if held.

Hooper Raps Ford, Hearst And Gompers In Statement

Chicago, Ill.—Edsel Ford and Henry Ford, referred to as "Edsel's papa," are featured in a spirited statement issued by Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States railroad labor board, as a reply to criticism by what Mr. Hooper terms "the new triumvirate of Hearst, Gompers and Ford."

The statement came as Chairman Hooper's first recognition of attacks directed against the labor board's recent majority opinion rejecting "the living wage theory "advanced by railway labor spokesmen. This principle given strict application, would give common laborers a minimum wage of about 72 cents an hour, according to some estimates.

Woman Candidate's Chief Interests Home and Family

MRS. MATHILDA BOORMAN, ASPIRANT TO SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE, PLACES POLITICS SECOND

"I was orphaned at the age of one and one-half years by the death of my father who was killed in the civil war. To that event I attribute the hatred of war that caused me to turn actively toward the Socialist party at the outbreak of the great war."

Thus are her party affiliations explained by Mrs. Mathilde Boorman, Wisconsin's first woman candidate for any state office, and Wisconsin Rapids' only representative on any of the party tickets for state office. Mrs. Boorman is the Socialist party candidate for Secretary of State.

A resident of Wisconsin Rapids since her marriage to Dr. C. A. Boorman 34 years ago next Wednesday, Mrs. Boorman's interest in politics has always been and still continues to be secondary to her interest in her home.

Home First Duty

"We women are the home-makers," she told a representative of the Tribune, "that is our primary duty and privilege, and I cannot help but believe that the failure of many women to successfully acquit themselves of this responsibility is the cause of many of our ills which mere political reform can never cure. As home-makers, however, we naturally have a very deep interest in the affairs of government, many of which touch us very closely, and I think it is only natural and right that women should desire and take an active part in the making and enforcement of our laws."

Mrs. Boorman was born in Montello, Marquette county, where following the death of her father in the civil war she lived with her mother for about eight years. The family then moved to Madison, where her mother remarried and where Mrs. Boorman received her education.

Completing her school work, she became a stenographer and gained her first contact with political life through assisting in the Harrison-Cleveland campaign. She was also for a time in the employe of R. C. Richmond, Prohibition party candidate for governor. In the fall of 1888 she married Dr. C. A. Boorman, and came to this city, where five boys and two girls, five of whom are now living were born and brought up. One son, Curtis, served with the American army overseas and was with the forces that occupied Metz shortly before the Armistice.

Is Foe of Liquor

Questioned in regard to her position on the Prohibition question, Mrs. Boorman replied that she was strongly opposed to the return of the saloon and was a foe of liquor in any form, but that she felt that the return of light wines and beer through a modification of the existing laws to be preferable to the continuance of the present reign of moonshine and bootleg whiskey. She favors the handling of prescription whiskey directly by the federal government.

As stated heretofore, Mrs. Boorman dates her active affiliation with the Socialist party from the opening of the great war in Europe. Her interest in the Socialist movement originated years before, however, and her present membership in the party is founded upon her support of the party's social and economic program as well as upon its attitude toward war.

"I am a socialist," she stated, "because I see in the Socialist party the only constructive remedy for present economic conditions. I have always had a great sympathy for poor people and in Socialism I see the only opportunity for making their lives better and happier."

Mrs. Boorman favors a bonus for the soldiers who served overseas in the great war, but does not believe it essential for those who were merely in the training camps on this side of the water. "If they had conscripted wealth to pay for the war I would not be in favor of a bonus of any sort, but inasmuch as those who did not fight were permitted to gain riches out of the war, I believe that the boys who made the great sacrifices involved in service on the battle fields of Europe should have some additional reward."

Nomination a Surprise

Although she has been active in the work of the Socialist party of the state during the last few years, Mrs. Boorman never aspired to political office, and the action of the Socialist convention at Milwaukee in nominating her for Secretary of State came as a great surprise. After refusing the nomination for Lieutenant Governor, which was first tendered her, she accepted that of Secretary of State because she felt it a woman's duty to do her part in carrying on the movement in which she believed.

State Accounts Are Only Two Cents Off In 2 Years

Madison, Wis.—State funds are handled with care, with such scrupulous care, Henry Johnson, state treasurer, (says, that in two years with hundreds of thousands of dollars involved, a difference of but two cents was found between state accounts and those of banks with which it was doing business.

Writing to the state treasurer the president of one large banking institution said, "In compliance with your letter we have debited your account with the sum of two cents, thus adjusting the difference between our statement and your books.

"I wonder if voters of the state realize how carefully public money is handled. When one stops to think of the many thousands of dollars that have gone through this account and a two cent adjustment is all that is necessary at the end of a two year period, the record is indeed remarkable."

Treasurer Johnson says that under the present system of handling public funds there is no opening for a leak of any kind.

Eau Claire Normal Wins Over Pointers 10 to 3

Stevens Point, Wis.—The Eau Claire Normal football team, outplaying the Stevens Point normal eleven, won Friday afternoon on the fair ground, 10 to 3.

Eau Claire's eleven, in better condition than the Pointers, had the edge on the playing for two periods, and in those two quarters put over enough to sew up the battle.

Civilization follows the Cow and the Hen

A good diet makes for leadership.

The cow and the hen—butter and eggs—are the source of national efficiency because they keep folks well fed—and no nation or individual ever forged ahead on an empty stomach.

"The people who have achieved, who have become large, strong and vigorous people, who have the best trades in the world, and who are progressive in science and in every activity of human intellect—these are the people who have used butter and eggs liberally."

Dr. E. V. McCallum, of Johns Hopkins University

The more Butter—the better

Butter is a concentrated food: is much more than a fat; it is rich in Vitamines—that essential element which gives you the 'pep' you need, the nourishment you must have and the nerves so essential.

Eggs—Nature's "Original Sealed Package"—are your mainstay for health, convenience and economy. No housewife should stint on Butter and Eggs.

Pioneer Eggs
Butter, eggs, salt and pepper. Heat individual baking dishes very hot, and put a large lump of butter into each. When butter is melted and steaming hot, break an egg into each dish, season with salt and pepper, and serve when heat of the butter has coagulated the white.

When you leave out the Butter and Eggs you leave out the goodness.

There's no such thing as a 'substitute'
